

IPL PhotoFacial FACT SHEET

Benefits -

An IPL PhotoFacial treatment utilizes advanced non-laser, IPL (intense pulse light) technology. An IPL device delivers precise amounts of light energy through the skin's surface for collagen production and stimulation. The entire PhotoFacial system is designed to soften the appearance of aging skin, fine lines and wrinkles. The treatment is also recommended for the reduction of redness associated with rosacea.

Description of Treatment -

Prior to an IPL PhotoFacial, the area to be treated is cleansed and coated with a gel for added comfort. An IPL device is maneuvered over the treatment area, in a series of gentle pulses. The light penetrates through the skin, and is then absorbed by the abnormal vessels or pigmentation. The heat from the IPL device causes damage to the unwanted cells, and the skin quickly begins a natural healing process, which stimulates collagen production.

The entire treatment can last anywhere from 15-45 minutes, and depends on the severity and size of the treated area. The skin is lightly cleansed once again after the treatment is over, and a high-grade sunscreen is then applied.

Multiple IPL Photofacial treatments, in a series of 4-6 sessions, are usually required in order to achieve optimal results. The unwanted skin cells typically darken and eventually flake off, or the body absorbs them. The healing process usually takes 1-2 weeks; therefore, patients are not recommended to receive a PhotoFacial just prior to any special event.

It is always recommended to seek out a qualified and trained provider for any resurfacing procedure.

Average Cost -

The cost of IPL PhotoFacials can range from $300-$500. These prices are greatly affected by the provider and the area treated. National Laser Institute offers this procedure at more the half the retail price, with treatments starting at just $75.
